Sejong College of Economics offers: Bachelor's Degree in Economics

Students are taught to become well-grounded in economics, so they are very good at analyzing and synthesizing things in local and comprehensive ways. As a result, they are capable of presenting solutions or alternatives in critical situations. This is because the theory of economics can offer methods in order to tackle economic, political, and social issues via various methods about prioritizing, model-building, quantifying, estimating, and forecasting, even though economists know the uncertainty and the limitations of human intellectuality very well. Our graduates work in various fields, such as financial and trading companies, state-owned companies, the press, and academia. Some start their own business, and others work as professionals, such as CPA's and patent agents after passing the state-administered license exam.
